The Quotation "Procrastination is the thief of time, collar him", poignantly captures the essence of procrastination as an unwelcome intruder in our lives. Dickens suggests that procrastination not only steals our precious time, but also ~~even~~ encourages us to take ~~a~~ proactive steps ~~toward~~ towards it. By using the metaphor of "dressing up", the thief emphasizes the need for a conscious effort to combat this habit. In my opinion, procrastination is a big problem, for personal and professional growth. First, it results ~~in a~~ ~~waste of~~ time-wasting, often leading to unnecessary stress as a closing market. For example, during my friend's last senior year, he could regularly put off last minute assignments. This is how much easier to compromise him the less any painting, but it has additionally affected his overall well-being and caused sleepless nights filled with anxiety.
